

Hi,

I'm an individual investor from Sweden with a relatively small yet for me big investment in the US. I'm increasingly worried about the lack of transparency in the US markets hence why I'm submitting my short comment. I'm adamant about not letting the length of my comment affecting the strength of it, because I'm genuinely worried and as a result I warn family and friends about investing in the US markets. The lack of transparency is indeed a huge issue and one that an increasingly large amount of people are getting aware of. For the sake of retail investors like myself from all over the world but also for the integrity of the US markets I implore you to make the right decision on this and push for more transparency and for a system where rules are upheld. A system where crimes are properly punished (especially large institutions that game the system) and where the markets are actually fair.

I know that "We The Investors" have also commented on this proposal and I fully stand behind their suggestions and comments.

I'd also like to thank you for letting me comment on this.

Kind Regards

Eric Davidsson
